Evening undertake a Boat Cruise in the Muthurajawela Nature Reserve - one single continuous coastal wetland. Twice daily the high tide brings seawater into the wetland, while fresh water from a watershed of 720 km<sup>2</sup> is discharged at the junction of the lagoon and the marsh. Continuous mixing of these two waters has led to a brackish ecosystem, with high productivity and high biological diversity. Many species of fish, shrimps and crabs spend a part of their life in the shelter of mangroves and sea-grass beds. Both the marsh and the lagoon house numerous plant and animal species, of which many are rare or endemic. The protected estuarine crocodile reproduces here, large numbers of migratory birds come here for nestling and feeding too.
